On the right turn of the image, there are several notable features:

- Traffic Cones: There is an array of orange traffic cones lining the edge of the turning lane. These are typically used for traffic redirection or hazard marking.
- Sidewalk: Adjacent to the road, there is a sidewalk which is a paved path for pedestrians.
- Building with Arches and Columns: Further down the right turn, there is a building with architectural designs including arches and columns. This could be a commercial or public building.

Please note that this is a general description based on the image and the actual features may vary depending on the specific location.

if you were an navigation agent and tell the driver when to turn left , how can you say it humanly?

Sure, if I were a navigation agent, I might say something like this:

"Alright, in about 300 meters, you'll want to start preparing for a left turn. You'll see a large oak tree on the corner – that's your cue. Take it easy, signal early, and make your turn safely. We're not in a rush. Safe travels!"

You

I meant right turn.

Of course, my apologies for the confusion. If I were a navigation agent, I might say something like this:

"Okay, coming up in about 200 meters, you're going to make a right turn. Look out for the building with the arches and columns, it's just past that. Remember to signal ahead of time and take the turn smoothly. Drive safe!"

You

tell shortly, use only easily human recognisable objects

Sure, here's a short version: "In a short while, turn right at the building with arches."

How about this image? how will you tell the driver?

In this case, I might say: "Up ahead, you'll see a building glowing with a bright red light. Make your turn there. Remember to drive carefully as the intense light might affect visibility."

You

try to consider roadside info as a top priority and then consider others

Understood. In this case, I might say: "As you approach the pedestrian crossing ahead, prepare to make your turn. Be mindful of the bright red light from the building, it's just past the crossing."
